One Autumn Day: Surviving Cancer Fred Scott

"An epic journey full of peaks of elation and troughs of despair" - Stephen Cannon VP Royal College of Surgeons of England

"Fred's writing is an affirmation of life" - Dr Nadine Izumi, Anaesthetist

At 23 years of age, a shooting pain in the left knee during a morning run can easily be ignored. This was not the case for Fred. Subsequent scans and doctors' appointments resulted in the shocking diagnosis of osteosarcoma – a rare and deadly bone cancer.

Rattled by the prospect of premature death, Fred made a decision to do everything in his power to survive, and help those experiencing what he was forced to endure.

A narrative relevant to survivors, carers and victims alike, One Autumn Day gives unparalleled insight into the effects and implications of the most vicious and indiscriminating disease known to man: cancer.

Fred's physical and psychological battles are both encouraging and inspirational. His heart-warming story will certainly offer consolation and reassurance to those living with the reality of cancer.
