You just pay fine and leave. No hard feelings. Not really anyway. Life too short to hold grudges. That why we have fines. No grudge" he said. "You look like a walking piece of blue elephant shit", she said, annoyed at his arrogance. "Elephant? Bah, insult no good. Still pay fine. Take her away!" he barked at the rather muscular escorts who ironically enough seemed a tad less blue from embarrassment. She heard him mutter "I too nice to tourists. Must be getting soft" as he walked away. The two men she had hungrily fucked an hour prior now stood erect at either side of the entrance to the chief. She didn't want to go in, at least not voluntarily. Sera took a deep breath and held it. She walked into the tent as grudgingly as she could, looking downward. Inside were blankets, pillows, and a post next to a lab apparatus of some demented kind which housed test tubes and bottles of varying shapes and colors. It looked like a science experiment she had built once for a school project, though this one seemed much more advanced. For what purpose, however, was completely unknown to her, and more than a little unsettling. "You stand over dere", the king pointed towards the post. Looking downward, she walked over to the post. She had no credits, no warez to barter with, no stolen goods. There was nothing to bargain for her freedom except virus-laden felines who were probably not in the best of moods. What was she supposed to trade anyway? How was she to pay this silly fine? She looked around the bizarre multi-colored tent, noticing a few bloodstains near the post. "This shit is not good", she thought.
