When Thatch Reston, a new, up-and-coming hot shot in the tattoo world, went to do a private ink job for the rock legend that helped put his name on the map, he never expected to meet the girl of his dreams. And, he didn't. Instead, he met California Huntington, who – according to the tabloid press – is a rich, self-absorbed, over-privileged socialite with a drug and alcohol problem. In other words, everything Thatch is NOT looking for in a potential soul mate. If he were, hypothetically-speaking, looking for one at all, that is. California Huntington has a secret she's ashamed of. She perpetuates the media image of party-girl-gone-wild, only because it covers the real and ugly truth. Yes, she does abuse drugs, and yes, she has a problem with them, but it's less an addiction and more a side effect of what her real issue is. Cali is bulimic – and has been since she was fifteen. In her world, drugs and alcohol are glamorous while a eating disorder is something sordid and dirty that should never be discussed in public. Cali soon realizes she needs to seek help before she falls deeper into that rock bottom she's hovering on the edge of. It takes one intense night with Thatch, a complete stranger, to change her life forever. If only she could convince him that, despite her past, she's worth taking a chance on.
