Though she leads a glamorous public life as a famous and well-paid movie star, Marie LeClerc is unsettled in her private life. Embroiled in a disappointing affair with her director, she is stuck on board a ship that is traveling the route of the Titanic, starring in a film about that ship's tragic accident and subsequent sinking.

What is even more unsettling is that since she came on board the Castlemere, Marie has been catching glimpses of a man's face in mirrors, windows, and other reflective surfaces on the ship. She's not frightened, she's seen ghosts and restless spirits before, but she wonders why the young man's spirit is not at rest. Could he be the ghost of a victim of the disaster? Is his spirit trapped by the artifacts that they've brought along on the journey?

But the young man remains a mystery until one night, after angry words between herself and her director lover, Marie finds herself transported to the Titanic itself. There she meets Edward, the young man whose face has haunted her for days, and discovers that she has arrived on April 14th, just hours before the ship is due to strike an iceberg and sink into the freezing waters of the Atlantic.

Can Marie save the ship? Can she save herself? Or is she fated to die there, aboard the doomed ship, in the arms of the man she crossed time to meet?
