Dr. Larry Crabb is well-known for his books on counseling and Christian growth. While he refers to his counseling model and methods as biblical, this book shows how secular psychological theories influence his teachings about the human condition, how people change and grow, and how they can find God. The book provides a detailed analysis of Crabb's psychotheology with descriptions of his need-driven theology, his teachings on unconscious motivators of behavior, and his exposing process. The authors trace Crabb's journey of jolts, shifts, and expansions and show that while Crabb's books may progressively sound more biblical, his eclectic theories and methods remain psychologically bound.
